

The International Society for the Study of Rural Crime invites you to an online roundtable

“Policing Rural Communities”

Rural crime and criminal justice practices and responses face different challenges from those experienced in urban contexts. This practitioner-focused roundtable investigates challenges and innovations in international contexts on issues surrounding rural policing.

This roundtable will provide an opportunity for participants to hear first-hand from four leaders in rural policing about work being done in both hemispheres to police rural crime.

We ask our panellists two key things:

1. What are the key challenges for rural policing?
2. What innovations are being deployed internationally to address these challenges?
